Questions 11 – 18

Read the following passage and then fill in the numbered blanks with the best answer.

Schools must increase the number of disciplinary and counselling teachers to keep social ills in check. The current practice 11 having only one teacher in charge of disciplinary matters is inadequate to maintain discipline.

There is an urgency to nip in the bud 12 caused by indisciplined students in primary and secondary schools. Disciplinary teachers 13 to ensure that they could effectively tackle such matters in schools. They should also be trained to understand the students' psychology and the influences in 14 surroundings.

A study carried 15 by Universiti Putra Malaysia and the Civic Bureau found that most of the problematic students came from low-income families and troubled homes.

Parents, society leaders and teachers all have a role to play in overcoming social ills 16 children.

The study, which was conducted in 150 schools and 17 8,000 students in both rural and urban areas 18 submitted to the Education Ministry to act on the matter immediately.

Section C

Read this passage and then answer the questions that follow.

This is a graphic description of a hurricane on an isolated Pacific village. The 'bures' mentioned in the passage are the traditional thatched cottages of the region.

- 1 On the morning of the thirty-fifth day of drought, the sun rose red over a great bank of black cloud, and a wind blew in from the sea, smelling of rain. People staggered half-asleep from their bures and stood facing the wind, laughing like small children. Such clouds they'd never seen before. They were higher than mountains and as wide as the island, dark as the depths of night. At last the sun was returning all the water it had stolen. 5
- 2 But as they watched, the wind grew stronger. Within minutes the sea was swept into white-peaked waves that burst into foam on the beach. Palms creaked, groaned, and bent their leaves. The village was shrouded in dust and flying leaves.
- 3 The people hurried back to their bures. The wind had whipped the smiles from their faces, and their voices were shrill with alarm. This was the beginning of a hurricane. 10
- 4 Even as they tried to close the thatched shutters, the wind hit with full force and tore the fastenings from their hands. The air screamed into their bures as though it were full of attacking demons, which choked and blinded them with dust.
- 5 Families crouched in fear and held on to one another, heads bowed, while walls bent toward them and the thatch of roofs peeled away. Outside they could hear the death sounds of trees, shrieks of splintered wood, then thumps, as the green giants of their village were ripped from the ground. 15
- 6 The rain came with the same murderous fury, not rain at all but a torrent of dark water, which burst against the village like a tidal wave, soaking the bures in seconds and pouring down the inside walls. It climbed cold around the ankles of terrified men and women who tried to hold their children beyond its reach. They screamed and prayed but couldn't hear the sounds of their own voices. Their ears were full of the noise of wind and water and terrible thunder. White fire lit the fear on their faces, flash after flash of lightning. The forked tongue of the Snake God Degei brought punishment to his people. His voice called for their destruction. 20
- 7 In the darkness of Luisa's bure, three people huddled against the strongest wall, waiting for death. Samu was as speechless as Jonasi, and Luisa by now was so frightened she could neither cry nor pray. The black water rose around their legs and was flowing so fast that the bure would have been swept away had it not been built against a strong tree, which in turn was protected by other trees. 25
- 8 It was not the wind and rain that Luisa dreaded, but the water they stood in. It was salt. That could mean only one thing: the sea was rising to cover the land.
- 9 Because of the turtle. She was sure of it now. Everything because of that turtle.
- 10 But the sea rose no higher than their ankles. As time passed, so did the hurricane. Late in the afternoon the wind lessened and gradually died until the rain fell straight to earth. The sea retreated. 30
- 11 It was nearly over.
- 12 Tired, silent people waded through the water that flowed across their village and looked at the desolation. Everywhere there was wreckage. The torrent had swept banks of debris against uprooted trees, forming dams, and against one of these was the body of a goat. The other goats, still leashed by their necks, were also dead. The ducks and hens had disappeared. 40

- 13 It would be a long time before they would have more copra. Those palms that hadn't fallen were stripped of nuts and most of their leaves. One canoe lay on its side in the middle of the village where the cooking fire had been; the others had been swept away. 45
- 14 Everything was choked with thick yellow mud.
- 15 The people had been delivered from one fear to another. Now they had water, plenty of water, but hunger was much closer than it had been the day before.
- 16 They splashed around their bures trying to rescue their few possessions, sleeping mats, a little food, a wooden bowl here, a cooking pot there - doing what they could to repair damage before nightfall. Some of the bures were still intact, some required more work than could be done in a day. But only one had been completely destroyed. 50
- 17 The home of Bulai had been swept away.
- 18 Bulai and his wife were safe. At the height of the storm the wind had lifted their roof, first a corner, then the whole thing. Bulai had dragged his wife out into the screaming darkness to the next bure, and only just in time. Another great gust and the walls twisted and collapsed. When the hurricane died, there wasn't a trace of the house they'd lived in. It had all been swept out to sea. 55

Question 48

Read the poem "Sonnet 18" and answer the questions that follow.

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate.
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd;
And every fair from fair sometimes declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course, untrimm'd;
But thy eternal summer shall not fade
Nor lose possession of that fair thou ow'st;
Nor shall Death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou grow'st;
So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

William Shakespeare
